

Reflection

Every art work contains its fair share of challenges. However I can't say how many I actually had with Big Bear. Using Illustrator is one of my favorite things to do! While I was creating this I did notice what a difference it makes altering things on Photoshop actually creates a different meaning than it originally did. Another thing, this isn't even my first Know Thyself project I had in mind, not even the second. My original ideas had to do with miniature people, however both in different scenarios. In the first I had planned to maneuver an army of myself, with the task to open a coke bottle. It was pretty neat creating it however that wasn't the project for me. When it came to the second project it was of ballerinas walking down the boulevard, a lot like Abbey Road. However I did want something more original. Therefore I took the idea from "Big Brother" from the late 80's movie Nineteen Eighty-Four. I replaced the "brother" so to say, with a bear whom is very dear to me. Often as a child you fear or wait for your stuffed animals to come alive. or you feel as though they are watching you. I stretched this idea to make it seem neat yet bring back a childhood memory that more than I just feel.
